SNACKS: HALF-YEAR UPDATE 2022

Snacks are expected to maintain a strong sales outlook as consumer demand remains strong

In the near term, pricing actions amidst high inflation are driving value growth in snacks

Increased prices are justified by rising costs of commodities critical to formulations

Across markets, snack value sales are expected to grow with ample unmet market potential

The many layers of global inflation

On the other hand, volume growth is being challenged by inflationary pressures

As costs increase, some resort to pack shrinkage – contributing to reduced volume growth

Consumers are also showing signs of cutting back on overall volume

Strategies should consider the high snack sales growth rates in developing regions

A renewed focus on “value” is needed to address concerns regarding rising costs

Industry and consumers agree – sustainability and health will highly impact the future

Conclusions/takeaways from the snacks half-year update 2022

MACROECONOMIC UPDATE

Global growth outlook continues to worsen amid rising recession risks

Persistent and broadening inflation significantly reduces consumer spending power
